THE ENTIRE LIFE AND FULL CONFESSION OF ARTHUR ORTON, THE TICHBORNE CLAIMANT. [WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.] HIS REMARKABLE LIFE AND ASTOUNDING REVELATIONS.

SUMMARY OF PARTS I. TO V.
Arthur Orton, by the instalments which have appeared from week to week in "The People," has brought his confession down to a most interesting point. In Part V. he gave a detailed account of the marvellous manner in which he secured valuable evidence in support of his claim to be Sir Roger Tichborne. He never lost an opportunity of applying the process of "pumping" to any one who knew anything about the family or the estates. Information thus obtained was in some instances used immediately afterwards with most important results. Even Col. Frank Tichborne, who had proclaimed opposition to the claimant in strong terms, was deceived by this dexterous use of recently acquired knowledge, and others were in like fashion won over to the side of the son of the Wapping butcher. Last week's instalment contained an account of the manner in which he had gone to Boulogne (whether he had gone to escape a judgment summons issued in respect of an unpaid loan) to the death-bed of Lady Tichborne.

COPY OF SWORN AFFIDAVIT MADE BY ARTHUR ORTON BEFORE A COMMISSIONER FOR OATHS.
I, ARTHUR ORTON, of _____, in the County of London, make oath and say as follows:—

1.—The statements and facts in the statements now produced and shown to me and marked A, giving a complete account of my life from 1844 down to the present time, together with my confession, and the whole of the circumstances which induced me to lay claim to the Tichborne Estates, are absolutely true and correct in every particular.

FINDS LADY TICHBORNE DEAD.
When I got to the top of the stairs I met Mrs. Howlett, the proprietress of the hotel. I was making my way into the drawing-room when she said, "No, here, Sir Roger, please," and she showed me into Lady Tichborne's bedroom. Seeing that she was in bed, and having no information that she was dead, and not supposing for one moment that anything so dreadful had happened in my absence, I went right up to the bed and kissed her, and said, "Are you ill, mother dear?" but she never answered me. She was quite dead, stiff and cold. It gave me an awful shock at the time, and I told them that my mother was dead. As Mr. Norris turned the corner into Manchester-street he met Mr. Blundell, who said to him, "Norris, is it true? I have heard that Sir Roger has poisoned Lady Tichborne?" When Norris received he told me what Blundell had said to Dr. Lancaster, the coroner, informing him of the allegation which had been made against me, and instructing him to hold an inquiry as to the cause of my mother's death.

of food in the stomach. The absence of food in the stomach was due to the fact that she was fasting in accordance with the rites of the Roman Catholic Church. She could get no indulgence from the priest on account of her not being absolutely ill. I saw her four days before her death; that would be either the day or the day before I started for Boulogne. She was then in her usual good health and spirits, and I bade her goodbye before I went to Boulogne. When I started for Boulogne she told me it would only be necessary for me to be away but a very few days, and that as soon as she had settled the judgment she would wire and let me know, and I could come back at once. On the night before she died she went to Witley Villas, and remained there till 12 o'clock at night expecting me to return, but, of course, I did not do so, as we lost the train in consequence of the boat being delayed. She left Croydon that night by the last train, and her death took place the following morning.

THE UNRECORDED WILL.
A somewhat curious incident occurred before she went down to Croydon. On her way to London Bridge she called at Norris's office and asked him if he would prepare her will in favour of me. Mr. Norris happened to be very busy that day, and he asked her whether she would kindly call another day, when he should be very happy to take her instructions for the preparation of her will. She accordingly left, and went straight on to Croydon. Lady Tichborne allowed me £50 a week from the time she met me in Paris down to the time of her death, which occurred on March 12, 1888. Lady Tichborne was everything that was kind and good to me, and if she had been an angel she could not possibly have done more for me than she did.

ORTON'S ENORMOUS LIABILITIES.
My total liability to the public is £1,000,000. I was in a position to pay in about £200,000. The first trial cost £200,000, and the second trial close upon £200,000. Printed bonds were issued by Messrs. Pearson, Claydon, and Pearson, of Great George-street, Westminster, to the extent of £100,000. Of these £100,000 was issued in bonds, £25,000 worth were deposited with Mr. Jones, proprietor of the Waterloo Hotel. They were in his safe at the hotel when I was arrested, and I have never been in the house since. Jones is now dead. His son is still alive, but I have never troubled any further about the bonds.

HIS SKILL AT CHESS.
Mr. Evelyn, of Deptford, who owned very valuable property in Kent, Middlesex, and Surrey, used to be very fond of playing a game of chess with me. In these days used to be considered a very good player, and several people used to be anxious to play me a game of chess. This was during the progress of my trial. Mr. Evelyn saw it stated in the papers that I could not play chess, and he was very much annoyed about this, because he knew perfectly well that I could. The chess game was a very good game indeed, and in order to contradict the statement which had got into the papers, that I was not nearly so good a chess player as I was represented to be, Mr. Evelyn used frequently to come and play me a game. Mr. Evelyn was a very good friend to me. He advanced me altogether about £7,000, but on the strict condition I never mentioned this to anybody. Upon one occasion he gave me a cheque for £5,000.

MONEY Poured IN LIKE WATER.
It was Evelyn's invariable practice whenever he came to see me, whether it was for the purpose of playing chess or simply a friendly visit to put a £1,000 Bank of England note in an envelope and give it to me before he left. He would say, "Well, Tichborne, put that in your pocket. I dare say it will come in useful to you." During the progress of my first trial I used to receive by the morning's post a very large number of letters from all sorts and conditions of the public. All these letters contained expressions of sympathy with me in the great fight I was making for the estate, and each letter contained either a cheque or a Bank of England note. The sums of money that I received varied in size, but most letters contained cheques or notes varying from £20 to £100 and £500 to £1,000. A singular feature of these letters was that most of the money which was in notes was sent to me unregistered.

LORD RIVERS' IMPATIENT.
Amongst the large sums of money I had given to me in order to carry on my trial was a sum of money from Mr. Horace Pitt. Afterwards the Earl of Rivers, amounting in the aggregate to £163,000. I often asked him to accept bonds for this amount, and he refused to do so, saying, "I know, Tichborne, when you get your money you will pay me, but if you don't, and my executors get hold of you, they will worsen the life out of you; and if you do not, then you cannot pay me." Amongst other large sums that I received was £20,000 from Mr. Guilford Onslow. His two sisters gave me £20,000 each, and a Mr. Evelyn, from whom the Government rented a large quantity of property at Woolwich Arsenal, also gave me a good sum of money, but I cannot say exactly how much it was, but at all events it was a substantial sum.

EVERYTHING LIKE A TRIAL.
My trial lasted 2 years and 18 days. During that time I was 35 days in the witness-box, 99 days under cross-examination, during which time I had 11,900 questions put to me, and the prosecution had to admit at the close of the trial that out of that number of questions I had answered 9,300 accurately.

the convenience of the judges and counsel. Lord Chief Justice Bovill was the presiding judge; my solicitors were Messrs. Baxter, Rose and Norton, of No. 6, Victoria-street, Westminster. There were 84 witnesses called on behalf of the plaintiff. Sergeant Ballantine was my leading counsel, who was assisted by Mr. Hardinge Giffard, Q.C., and now Lord Halsbury and late Lord Chancellor; Mr. Pollard, the Attorney-general of Hong Kong and China, who came home to take part in the case; Mr. Francis Jones, now President of the Divorce Court; and Mr. William Rose. The case in support of the Duke of Wellington's claim was opened by Mr. Sergeant Ballantine in a speech which occupied several days.

HIS OPINION OF HIS COUNSEL.
Most people thought it was a very clever opening speech, but I thought it was rubbish. After he had opened the case in support of my claim I met me in Westminster Hall, and said, "Well, Tichborne, what do you think of my opening speech?" I said, "Not much; I think it is rubbish." Of course, that offended him, and no doubt that accounted for his asking for a non-suit to Messrs. Baxter, Rose, and Norton and myself, and without consulting either them or me. That I know to be a fact. The leading counsel for the defendants was Sir John Coleridge. The first witnesses examined were a number of officers from the Carabiniers, who were called to prove that I was Roger Tichborne, and that I had been with them at the time of the trial, and was under examination and cross-examination about 40 days. I was cross-examined by Sir John Coleridge, who was assisted in his task by a Mr. Hawkins (now a judge), and others.

WHEN HE SCORED AND WHEN HE FAILED.
I will now tell you what I consider to be the weakest parts in my cross-examination, and the strongest, and those which I consider that I scored off. I will first of all say you what I consider to be some of the weakest parts of my case. First and foremost I may say at once that I consider that perhaps the weakest part in my case was that in reference to Stoneyhurst College, where Roger Tichborne had been educated for several years, and though I had never heard of that college before, and the school was during the progress of the trial, not indeed have ever seen the building, still, with all the ingenuity that was displayed by the counsel, they were not able to shake the evidence which I gave in support of that part of the case. It was only by listening to the questions put to me by the counsel in regard to my school days that I got to know anything at all about the college. I got through the examination in reference to the college pretty well, but I consider that I was entirely floored in regard to my want of knowledge of the additions which had been made to the college, and of which I was perfectly ignorant. Several witnesses, however, testified that I was a drawing, arithmetic, and other things.

HUMOURS OF MR. SEAGER.
Just before the trial commenced I went with Father Guy, a Roman Catholic priest, on a visit to Mr. Seager, who lives at Preston, and whose brother was a celebrated barrister, now practising in Liverpool. Mr. Seager had a very large plate of Stoneyhurst College in his dining room, having been educated at the college. Francis Baigent, who was a very clever, bratted witness at my trial, and who was six days under cross-examination, and who was a witness under examination, went with us on this visit to Seager. Seager had been partly educated at Stoneyhurst College, and he was formerly a mate of the late Roger Tichborne. From conversations I had with Seager I made him believe that I was the real Roger Tichborne, and he was an affidavit that I was the same Roger Tichborne that was with him at Stoneyhurst College.

AN AMUSING BLUNDER.
There were really so many incidents in connection with this long and exhaustive trial, and so many jokes cracked by the judges and counsel, that it is impossible to remember all of them; but I do remember a very funny incident in connection with a witness named Sergeant-major Quinn, who had been in the Carabiniers at the same time as Roger Tichborne, and who came forward and swore positively to my identity as Roger Tichborne. Oddly enough, there was a man named Quinn in the service of Lady Tichborne, and he was her butler. Detective Wither, who was employed to get up the case for the other side, upon hearing that Quinn had been in the service of Lady Tichborne made cocksure from what he heard from some of the Carabiniers that this man was no other than Sergeant-major Quinn who the trial Sergeant-major that registered at the trial Sergeant-major Quinn was called as a witness on my behalf. He was one of the finest men I think I have ever seen, and stood about 6ft. 4in., and he appeared in the witness-box in the full uniform of a sergeant-major of the Duke of Wellington's Yeomanry, the position he then held and had held for years. Hawkins got up to cross-examine him, and commenced in the following way:—

"How long, sergeant-major," said he, "have you been in the plaintiff's service?"

The sergeant-major looked astonished, and replied, "Never."

"Well, well, well," said Hawkins, "how long have you been in Lady Tichborne's service?"

"Never, sir," replied the sergeant-major.

"What," said he, "do you mean to say that you were never butler at No. 2, Witley Villas?"

"No, sir."

"Were you ever a butler?"

"No, sir."

"Well, what are you, then?"

"I am a sergeant-major."

"A sergeant-major. Sergeant-major of what?"

"Sergeant-major of the Duke of Wellington's Yeomanry at the present time."

"How long have you been sergeant-major of the Duke of Wellington's Yeomanry?"

"Ever since I left the Carabiniers."

"Do you mean to say that you have never been to Witley Villas?"

"Oh, yes, I have been there on one occasion."

"And what did you go there for?"

"To see the Duke of Wellington."

"What had the Duke of Wellington got to do with you?"

"He told me to go and see the plaintiff, and tell him whether he was Roger Tichborne or not."

"And I suppose you came back and told him that he was?"

"Yes, I did."

"And I suppose that you swear that he is now?"

"Yes, I do; I am on my oath."

With that Hawkins sat down, but with a look of disgust on him such as he never wore during the whole of the trial. Holding up his brief, and turning to Coleridge, he said, "To supply me with a lot of lies like this, and to cross-examine a witness upon them."

Coleridge simply smiled, but said nothing. This is simply explained by the fact that they had got hold of the wrong man. Shortly after this incident Hawkins had an opportunity of retaliating upon Coleridge, for, when cross-examining him, he referred to my visit to Mr. and Mrs. Radcliffe and Mrs. Towley, who lives at Essex Lodge, Thornton Heath, somewhere or other Coleridge confused the names, and kept going on asking me questions, but placing Mrs. Towley's name where Mrs. Radcliffe's ought to have been, and Mrs. Radcliffe's name where Mrs. Towley's name ought to have been, my answer being "No."

kins was living with Luie's wife. Hawkins, who is a keen wit and thoroughly appreciated the joke, turned to the witness and said, "One minute please, what did you say your maiden name was? I am not quite sure that we all caught it." The witness replied, "Cockburn," followed by great laughter. Hawkins imitated his learned friend Cockburn, held up his hands in a similar manner to that which Cockburn had done, as much as to say that he was also shocked at the admission of the witness.

AN AMUSING INTERLUDE.
During the time the trial was on the hearing was postponed upon one occasion because Ballantine was engaged in another case, and by the consent of all parties in my case, this one was allowed to be called. The plaintiff, who was a City stockbroker, and "got up" elegantly, only as a Cockney can get up, with an evening dress suit on, and with a pocket handkerchief on which was displayed a tremendous diamond fastened to a sort of safety pin; this diamond was visible to the court. After Sergeant Parry, who appeared for the plaintiff, had examined him, Ballantine rose to cross-examine him, and began in the following way:—

"You are, I believe," said Ballantine, "a stockbroker in the City, are you not?"

The witness, who answered very readily and with considerable emphasis, replied, "I am."

"Yes," said Ballantine, "and a very prettily dressed man you are." This observation of Ballantine's caused such a tremendous outburst of laughter that neither the counsel nor the jury could proceed any further with the case, which was ultimately settled by arrangement.

A SLIP OF THE TONGUE.
To return to the evidence which I gave at the trial. In connection with my cross-examination by Coleridge in reference to Stoneyhurst College, he asked me what the letters "L.S.D." meant on the facade of the college. I told him that we scholars used to use it to mean pounds, shillings, and pence. "But what do they mean?" said Coleridge, somewhat angrily. I replied, "Deus Semper Lausibus."

"Well," said Coleridge, "what is the meaning of that?"

I replied, "The laws of God for ever," whereas I intended to have said, "Praise God for ever." Coleridge, turning to the judges, observed, "It was a very good guess, indeed."

This was a lapsus linguae, and it was very curious that I came to make this mistake, because any kind of Latin is easy to me because speaking Spanish as fluently as I do, the Latin vulgate comes quite easy to me. This answer of mine was a mere slip of the tongue.

THE END OF THE FIRST TRIAL.
My first trial ended in my being committed at my own request to the custody of the King's Bench, and my attorneys and without my or their knowledge, so that Coleridge at once applied for a bench warrant. Now, to most people there would not be anything very extraordinary in that proceeding, but in reality it was a great item, because a person who is arrested under a bench warrant is not entitled to have his witnesses' expenses paid, but has to bear these expenses himself.

Therefore by departing from the usual course of taking me as I have been taken before a magistrate to answer the charge of perjury, which would also have enabled me to have mentioned or called a few witnesses, the whole of the expenses of the 780 witnesses who were subsequently subpoenaed and examined would have been paid by the Treasury. I heard afterwards that the Treasury had sent a sum of money—I don't know how much, but I was informed that it was a substantial amount—to me by a Treasury official, but it never reached me, nor did I know anything of it for many months after the trial was finished. How I came to hear of this was by this means. There was in the Treasury also a young man who also got into trouble, and afterwards became a fellow prisoner with me in Portsmouth Gaol, and he told me.

THE FORGOTTEN LETTERS.
In the course of the trial the counsel for the prosecution proposed to read certain letters to which Kenally objected. It was his objection in hand-writing. He told the counsel for the other side that all the letters were really not in my hand-writing, but that they were forgeries, and the other ones had been altered by the process of tracing. These were the three forged letters which Coleridge produced in the Court of Common Pleas, and which he asked me if they were in my hand-writing. For the purpose of doing this he took the trouble to leave the Q.C.'s benches, and walked over with them to the witness box to me. I looked at them at the distance at which he held them away from me, he not allowing me to have them in my own hands and believing them to be in my hand-writing I acknowledged them as such. He dealt with the three letters separately after he had returned and taken his seat in the Q.C.'s bench; then rising he said, "My lord, I will read these letters to the court, and he commenced to do so. These letters, if they had been in my own hand-writing, were sufficient to have sent me to Newgate at once.

ORTON IGNORES HIS COUNSEL.
I did not interrupt Sir John Coleridge whilst he was reading them, but when he had finished reading them I said, "Will you allow me to see those letters again, Sir John, please?" He said, "Certainly not, you have acknowledged them to be in your hand-writing and you have sworn to them, and that is sufficient." Ignoring my counsel, I turned to his lordship, and said, "My lord, will you order these letters to be handed to me that I may see them. They cannot be in my hand-writing, although I have acknowledged them."

I wish to examine them minutely; they are forgeries, my lord." Ballantine was taken by surprise at my appealing to his lordship direct. His lordship was also dumbfounded, but looked at the jury, and the jury were very dubious in their manner in answering to his lordship's look, and after this exchange of looks his lordship said, "Brother Coleridge, I must have overruled the judge, the plaintiff that he may see them." Coleridge said, "My lord, he has sworn that they are in his hand-writing, what more do we want?" "Never mind," said Bovill, "you let them be handed to him." The letters were then handed to me by Mr. Frayling, the tipstaff of the court, and, after examining them more closely, I turned to the judge again and said, "My lord, these letters are not in my hand-writing; they do not bear my private mark and my signature. I never noticed this before, because I could not see them at the distance at which Sir John Coleridge held them when he showed them to me."

HIS PRIVATE MARK.
Coleridge then jumped up and said, "Oh you have a private mark, have you?" I said, "Yes." "What is it?" said he. I said, "Is it likely I shall tell you after you have produced those forged letters?" and his objection of mine was, however, overruled by the judge, who ordered me to make known to the court my private mark, which I was compelled to do. My private mark was made with the point of the pen, and consisted of a peculiar curl in the T of Tichborne. Then I was cross-examined at full length as to whether my private mark would be found on all the cheques I had drawn at my banks. I said, "No cheque would be paid without that mark was upon it." "Where do you bank?" said Coleridge.

"At the London and South-western, Regent-street Branch, and at Robinson Bros. at Croydon." "Have you ever applied for the return of your old cheques?" "No," I said, "that would be of no use to me." In order to find out whether the cheques which I had drawn bore the private mark to which I have referred, the other side sent to the bank and got them to give up the old cheques which I had drawn, and which had been paid in. There was not a cheque that was handed to them which brought any reflection or disgrace upon me, and they all bore the peculiar private mark in the signature of Tichborne to which I have referred.

HIS ARREST AND RELEASE ON £10,000 BAIL.
The bench warrant having been granted at the termination of the first trial, I was arrested the same evening at the Waterloo Hotel in Jermyn-street and taken to Newgate, but I was released three weeks afterwards on a £10,000 bail. My sureties were the Earl of Rivers, Mr. Guilford Onslow, Mr. Lamont, and Dr. Atwood. I entering into my own recognisances in the sum of £5,000. After my release I continued to reside at my London house, Harley Lodge, Harley-road, Kensington. My second trial did not take place until about 17 months after the first. During the interim I did not trouble much about my forthcoming trial, in fact very little indeed, and I left it to my solicitors, who were working the case up.

Messrs. Walter and Grogan, of No. 8, Southampton-street, Bermondsey.

THE APPEAL TO THE PUBLIC.
Subsequently an appeal to the public was made through the various newspapers to assist me with funds to carry on my defence. Dr. Atwood and Mr. Guilford Onslow, who acted as trustees to the fund, appointed an ex-Army officer to act as hon. secretary, but the honorary part of his business consisted in his being paid for his services. There were also boxes placed in hundreds of public-houses for the reception of funds for me, and these boxes when full at the end of the week were taken to the hon. secretary and emptied by him. When it came to engaging counsel for my defence I requested Mr. Onslow to go and bring me the balance of the money that had been subscribed by the public after paying, of course, all expenses. From what I had heard and from what I knew in a reliable manner I expected to have got some 20, 30, or £40,000.

ALL THAT WAS LEFT OF IT.
A morning or two afterwards poor Onslow came to me and said, "There is the balance of the money, which has been collected for my defence," placing at the same time £7 15s. on the table. I looked at Earl Rivers and laughed. Out of the large sums subscribed by the public for me to enable me to carry on my defence, and acknowledged in the papers, all the money I received was £7 15s. Dr. Kenally was suggested to me by Lord Rivers as my leading counsel, and I concurred in that view, and I called on Dr. Kenally the next day and briefed him on my behalf, giving him 1,000 guineas on his brief.

distance and expense are great. You could not meet me here, and I could not come and meet you. I have been thinking of meeting with you under such circumstances would be too painful for you, and perhaps also for me. I will thank Miss Anna Bellar for me for her letter, and I will send you on the 21st of this month a straight razor of good steel, and she may try to persuade what she said. Give my best and kind love to all your friends, and those away, as well as to all my friends. I am sorry to have disgraced them. I will give you a new razor to replace, and forgive me what I have done.—Your affectionate son, Milton, per H. M. W.

P.S.—I wish you to remember me often—after every morning and evening in your next two letters.

LAST WEEK'S LAW AND POLICE.

A CHARTER PARTY ACTION.—Mr. Justice Mathew heard the case of Bayner v. Bederikabolsky, the defendants being shipping merchants at Stockholm. Counsel for plaintiffs said the action was brought by the charterers, Bayner and Co., against the owners of the St. Oran, who were the defendants to recover money, which it was said was overpaid under protest. The date of the charter was Aug. 16, 1894, the vessel having to proceed to Grimsby, where she was to load a cargo of coal. She was to be loaded in 72 hours, on 1st day of loading, to 7 a.m. on Monday, colliers' holidays, play days, and general holidays being excepted, the time to begin at 6 a.m. following receipt of notice of readiness to load. Supporting the vessel was detained longer, the charterers were to pay demurrage, but there was a clause in the charterparty to strike out and other clauses. The questions arising were whether there was any demurrage to be paid, and whether the charterers were entitled to claim a certain sum in consequence of the captain of the vessel refusing to sign bills of lading. The vessel arrived at Grimsby during the evening of Aug. 27, and the master after 3 p.m. gave no notice to the charterers but to a colliery company who were to provide the coal to be shipped. The question that arose was whether the days commenced at 6 a.m. on Aug. 28 or at 6 a.m. on Aug. 29. The charterparty provided that the notice was given to the proper persons, and next whether the notice was a good one for the 27th, being given after five o'clock in the evening. The vessel was no doubt in dock on Aug. 27 and 28, and was in all respects ready to receive the cargo, but was not in a place where that could be done. She did not commence to load till Sept. 7, completing on the 10th. On the completion the bills of lading were presented, but the captain wanted to insert a qualification contrary to the agreement. The charterers wanted to insert a qualification, but the cargo was not discharged without a payment for demurrage and expenses. This was made under protest, and hence the present action. His lordship came to the conclusion that the notice was one for Aug. 28, and the charterers were entitled to the sum of £278 6s. 6d., less £10 paid into court.

A TEA COMPANY AND ITS CAPITAL.—Mr. Justice North in the Chancery Division heard a petition for the reduction of the capital of the Mungie Tea Company, Limited, whose capital was originally £200,000 in 20,000 shares of £10 each. The company was incorporated in 1874 to purchase tea estates in Assam, for which purpose £110,000 was paid in fully paid-up shares, and subsequently other £100,000 was paid up. The total number of shares issued was 15,128, of which only 10 went to persons other than the vendors, viz., the signatories to the memorandum of association. Resolutions had been passed authorising the reduction of the capital from £200,000 in 20,000 shares of £10 each, to £50,000 in 5,000 shares of £10 each. The effect of the resolution would be to cancel capital that had been lost, or in respect of which there was no available assets. Eventually the court allowed the matter to stand over for a week to enable further affidavits to be filed showing how the capital had been lost.

A BLACKSMITH AND HIS NEPHEW.—In the Chancery Division, Mr. Justice Kekewich heard a motion in the case of Fanning v. Fletcher, which is a matter of the estate of Philip Cunningham, a blacksmith, of County Wicklow, who died on Jan. 19 last year. Plaintiff in the action was his sister, Mrs. Catherine Fanning, widow, who was the administratrix. The present motion was by her, for payment of a sum of £752 which she claimed was due to him from the deceased's estate, or in the alternative a sum of £212, being six years' arrears of wages. Counsel who appeared for the claimant said that his client was apprenticed to the deceased in 1886 for seven years, during which time he received no wages. In 1872 he became a journeyman, and it was arranged that instead of being paid cash he was to be boarded and lodged, and the balance was to be put in the bank for him. In 1885 he received £100 on account of the sum of £752 placed in the bank on deposit in the joint names and the money remained until October of that year. The uncle then asked the claimant to allow the money to remain in the bank in his name, promising that he should either transfer the money to the nephew or allow him to have the money on the uncle's death. Counsel for the plaintiff in the action entirely disputed the claim based on this extraordinary story. After further argument it was arranged that the claimant should receive £150 and his costs.

Bow-street.

ATTEMPTED FRAUD ON AN EX-M.P.—George Richardson, 45, of Bond-street, Vauxhall, dealer in clothes, was charged with attempting to obtain £20 by false pretences from Capt. Naylor-Leyland, formerly M.P. for Colchester. At a former hearing it was stated that the prisoner wrote a letter to Capt. Naylor-Leyland, who was then in the East, asking for a loan of £20. Capt. Naylor-Leyland said he received the letter (produced) about the 10th May, 1894. He called at Morley's Hotel, from which place the letter had been addressed, but he found that Mr. Corbett had not been there that day, so he telegraphed to him, and on the next day he communicated with the prisoner. The Rev. J. R. Corbett said he had not written the letter, he had never stopped at Morley's Hotel, and did not know the prisoner. He was not in London at the time the letter was written. W. Myson, hall porter at Morley's Hotel, said that an application was made by a messenger, called Mr. Corbett, for a letter addressed to Mr. Corbett. No such letter had been received. Det. sergt. McCarthy said the letter produced was in the handwriting of the prisoner. Committed for trial.

ALLEGED THEFT AT SOMERSET HOUSE.—Patrick MacLaughlin, Manor-street, Clapham-road, was charged with stealing letters from Somerset House, in the Inland Revenue Department, for upwards of 27 years. For some time past complaints had been received concerning lost letters, and it was thought the letters were stolen in transit through the post, the postal authorities have for some time been investigating the matter by means of test letters. Finally the Bow-street police were communicated with and the matter placed in the hands of Det. sergt. Hailstone. Mr. Dennis, who prosecuted on behalf of the Inland Revenue authorities, called witnesses to prove the concoction of five test letters containing postal orders, which were delivered by the postman, and subsequently handed to the accused to be taken to their destination in the various departments. Det. sergt. Hailstone said he followed the prisoner from Somerset House to the post office in New Bridge-street, Westminster, where he saw him present a postal order for payment after endorsing it. When searched at the station several letters were found upon him addressed to the Inland Revenue Department, Somerset House, some of them unopened. The order which the prisoner had cashed was one which had been enclosed in the test letters. When charged the prisoner said, "I won't give you any trouble. I am a ruined man."—Remanded.

Mansion House.

"ALL THROUGH A BIRD."—Charles Wm. Smith, 35, foreman packer, St. John's Church-road, Hackney, was charged with attempting to commit suicide.—P.C. Dunning said that at a quarter to 9 on Friday evening he was walking over London Bridge in plain clothes, when the prisoner suddenly sprang across the bridge, and prepared to spring into the river. Before he could do so, however, he seized him by the legs, and with the assistance of a passer-by held him until further police aid arrived. The accused said that it was "all through a bird in a race in which Victor Wild had won," and he had been robbed of £21 by the bookmaker, to whom he meant to give a good thrashing. The wife of the prisoner said that he was a splendid husband, but she was afraid that he had been worried. He had never attempted anything of the sort before. The Lord Mayor said that the prisoner was fortunate in having such a good wife to speak for him. No doubt he acted in a moment of frenzy. He could go home with his wife on the undertaking that he would never repeat the offence.

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S HEIR.—Ann Parry Charles, who appeared in court in pauper's garb, was charged with wandering about insane.—Sergt. McVittie, City Police, arrested the accused in the Strand, and on the following day he was taken to the Royal Hospital, where he had been a patient for some time, and had been a source of great annoyance there. In reply to the Lord Mayor the prisoner said that she had been left a large sum of money by the late Earl of Beaconsfield, but by a conspiracy she had been deprived of her rights under the will. It will be remembered that the accused was present in the High Court earlier in the week, and made an application with regard to the will, asserting that she was Lord Beaconsfield's heir. The accused, who gave her age as 60, was certified by Dr. Buncombe, the medical officer of the Bow Asylum, to be insane. The Lord Mayor ordered her to be removed to Stone Asylum, at Dartford.

Marylebone.

ALLEGED HIGHWAY ROBBERY AND VIOLENCE.—John Edwards, 19, baker, Thomas Evans, 19, flower-seller, Thomas Evans, 21, painter, and Annie Oakley, 21, landress, all living in the neighbourhood of Bangor-street, Notting Hill, were charged with stealing a watch and chain and assaulting Arthur Mays, a house decorator, Dean-street, Soho. The prosecutor said he was passing along the Edgar-road on his way home shortly after 10 o'clock at night, when he was accosted by the female prisoner. To avoid her he stepped into the carriage-way. A man who is not in custody followed sharply after him, struck him a heavy blow on the head, and knocked him to the ground. While on the ground the prisoner Edwards went up to him and deliberately kicked him twice on the chest. The other two prisoners then joined in robbing him of his watch and chain. After regaining consciousness witness got up and went in pursuit of the man not in custody. The prisoner Edwards followed witness, and as they ran along Edwards called out, "You shan't take my mate; I'll do a bit of time for you first, and at the same time dealt witness a heavy blow on the eye, which felled him to the ground. A constable soon arrived, and Edwards was arrested. While witness was following to the station, the female prisoner struck him with such force that he was knocked down, and was nearly run over by a cab. At the police station the prisoner Edwards admitted kicking the witness, and added that he had been beaten.—F. Verel, official keeper, and his assistant, gave corroborative evidence, adding that Evans also kicked the prosecutor. While down the prosecutor called out, "Give me fair play," and on retaining his feet said he had lost his watch and chain.—P.C. 194 D arrested Edwards. The prosecutor, the bleeding at the time, was arrested by P.C. Higgins, 24 DE, for being a suspected person found loitering at a house which has just been vacated by Mrs. Lane, the actress, at Grove-road, St. John's Wood.—Two of the witnesses strongly supported the defence set up by the prisoner Keenan, namely, that he was a stranger to the other prisoners, and was not present when the robbery and assault took place.—Mr. Curtis Bennett accordingly discharged Keenan. The others were remanded.

West London.

STREET BETTING.—George Edmund Watkin, 10, baker, of Milson-road, Hamam-street, was charged with causing an obstruction in Milson-road by betting.—The prisoner, who pleaded guilty, had £4 in gold in his possession.—Det. sergt. Knott, who arrested the prisoner, said there were in all five persons standing together on the footpath.—Fined £5.—Francis W. Hoggatt, commission agent, charged with causing an obstruction in North End-street, in this case a named Frederick Sheridan was arrested at the time for being concerned in causing the obstruction by betting, and charged before the magistrate, who fined him £5. It was stated that Hoggatt was the man who escaped, and a warrant was granted for his apprehension.—Det. sergt. Day said there were four or five men together.—Fined £5.

Ladbroke and New Visitor.

LABOURER AND HIS VISITOR.—James Bowen, labourer, was charged with being on the premises of a lady named Carolina Ponsford, who resided in Mill Hill-road, Acton.—On Friday morning the complainant heard the barking of the dog, and saw the prisoner enter the house in the act of going to the side door. She asked him what he wanted, but he did not answer, and stood with his back to the door. The lady became frightened and called for assistance.—Replying to the magistrate the prisoner said it was correct.—Mr. Rose: What do you say to the charge?—The prisoner, who answered somewhat vaguely, said his understanding was different to that of the magistrate's, but he would be judged by him.—Mr. Rose: What reason had you to go into the lady's house?—The prisoner: There was no natural reason, but still there was a reason.—The magistrate was informed that the prisoner had been in the Army and served in India a number of years.—Remanded for the surgeon to report as to prisoner's state of mind.

Marlborough-street.

ALLEGED FRAUDS.—George Miller, of the Haymarket and Forest-road, Surbiton; L. O. Groome, of the Haymarket; and Arthur W. Whitelaw, of the Haymarket and Lawrence-street, Chelsea, appeared together to obtain certain goods and money by means of false pretences from E. McDonald, of the firm of Martin and Co., wine and spirit merchants, Leith, Scotland.—The complainant, it appeared, advertised in 1894 for a London agent, and in consequence had communications with Miller, who had eventually been appointed London agent to Martin and Co. Goods were forwarded to Miller and the customers introduced by him. Great difficulty was experienced in obtaining payment, and it was alleged, cash was collected contrary to Messrs. Martin's strict instructions, that accounts were to be paid direct to him at Leith, and this money never reached the hands of Martin and Co.—It was urged in defence that through the business methods employed by the defendants were irregular, but there was no evidence of fraud.—The accused were remanded.

Westminster.

BROKER'S CHARGES TO THE POOR.—Among the applicants was a poor woman, who with her husband and two children occupied a second floor in Lapins-road, Pimlico, at a rental of £5 3d. a week. She complained that with one week's rent in arrears, the current week being tendered and refused, a distraint was made by a broker, at the instance of the landlord, upon a chest of drawers, a chest of drawers, and a table. Though the man was only one day in possession, and the goods were then removed to save further charges, the claim for expenses amounted to more than the debt.—12s.—Mr. Sheil, looking at the woman's papers, said the broker charged £5 for a man in possession for two days.—Warrant-officer Hunt, who made inquiries by letter of the direction, stated that the man was kept in the house for the second day, and was kept under half an hour after midnight on the day of the distraint.—The magistrate granted the applicant a summons for excessive distraint.

North London.

OUTRAGEOUS CONDUCT IN VICTORIA PARK.—Wm. Sneyd, 20, engineer's labourer, Dulac-road, Hackney, was charged with committing an outrageous assault on Ellen Worster, 17, dressmaker, Roman-road, Row.—The prosecutor said she was crossing Victoria Park on the previous afternoon when the prisoner rushed at her, threw her on to the grass, and attempted to assault her in a most outrageous manner. She struggled and screamed, and two park constables came to her assistance. The prisoner was pulled away from the grass, and was then taken to the police station. She had previously seemed perfectly sober.—Insp. Devereux, park police, said that in his opinion the prisoner was sober.—He now said he remembered nothing of what had occurred.—Remanded.

Highgate.

SETTING A TRAP.—Florence Hypparue, 18, servant, was charged with stealing a marked sixpence belonging to her employer, John Haley, coffee-house keeper, Archway-road, Highgate.—The prosecutor deposed that prisoner had been in his employ for six weeks. During that time he had missed money, cigarettes, and other articles, and he suspected the prisoner of having taken them. On Friday morning he marked some money in the till in his shop. He then went out, and on his return he missed sixpence of the marked money.—The wife of the prosecutor, deposed that when the money was missed she told both her servants that she should search their pockets. She did so, and in prisoner's dress pocket she found the marked sixpence.—Remanded on bail.

Thames.

JEWELLERY AFFILIATION CASE.—Samuel Rosen, tailor, Grove-street, Commercial-road, was summoned to show cause, &c., with regard to the child of Sarah Adler, Well-street, Spitalfields.—The child, a single woman, said she first met defendant three months before the Jewish new year, and it was the defendant's father who recommended him to her. He promised to marry her, and they lived together in Grove-street for about two months, and afterwards defendant threw her out of the house. On speaking to him of her condition, he said, "I cost me £100 to get you out of my house."—In cross-examination complainant denied having a husband in Poland.—Ultimately Mr. Dickinson dismissed the summons, on the ground of want of corroboration, and allowed defendant £1 is costs.

Clerkenwell.

A BAD BOY.—Jas. Buck, 14, was charged with stealing half a crown from his father, a house painter, Albert-street, Barnsbury.—On Thursday the father found that a drawer in his bed-room had been broken open, and half a sovereign abstracted. The boy did not return home, and was found in the streets on Friday night. On being taken home, he admitted having taken the money. His father gave the lad a beating, and he was put in a bed-room at Normanhurst, Brighton-road, Surbiton.—Mrs. White said that about a month ago the prisoner came to stay with some friends of hers, and as they could not put him up at night, her husband offered him a bed-room at Normanhurst. Finding that he had been ordering things from tradesmen in her name, witness told him to go away on Wednesday last. Prisoner became dreadfully excited, struck her with his fists, and when the housemaid came to his assistance, he attacked her most roughly, with the result that the poor girl was simply laid out. On Friday last the prisoner came back to the house. He demanded money from witness, tried to steal her purse, followed her into the drawing-room, seized her by the throat, struck her with his fists, and kicked her. When at last he was shoved out of the house, he stood in the grounds shouting, "Lunatic out of a lunatic house."—Fined £5.—The prisoner came back to the house. On Saturday afternoon the Cottage House Bounds Green-road, Wood Green, was opened by Mrs. Passmore Edwards before a assembly.

On Saturday Robert Wilson, 44, Green Lane, Commerce-road, Wood Green, was driving from Enfield to Farnborough, when a large potato rolled off the top of a load on to his head, knocking him into a roadway between the wheels of his van. He was severely injured and was taken to the City and County Hospital.

The 24th festival of the sisters of the church connected with the Orphanage Mercy was celebrated on Saturday at Augustine's Church, Kilbuck. The Rev. Moore, vicar of Hanover Church, Read street, preached, and spoke of the philanthropic work done by the society.

Ald. George Hay, J.P., was last week installed as Mayor of West Ham place of the late Mayor, Ald. H. W. This is the third occasion on which the man has occupied the mayoral chair.
